(3) Appropriation of Water in California. They include: (1) Statements of Water Division and Use, (2) Information Pertaining to Water Rights in California, and (4) have several pamphlets available. The State to determine if additional water is available for future appropriators.

Appropriative rights can be granted to waters "foreign" to the natural stream system.

There is a surplus not needed by riparian users. Since 1914, new appropriators have been required to obtain a permit and license from the State.

An appropriative right is required for use of water on non-riparian land and for storage of water. Generally, appropriative rights may be exercised only when upstream from their divisions, and (3) assists the State to notify such users if someone proposes a new appropriation.

There are two principal types of surface water rights in California. They are riparian and appropriative rights.

A riparian right enables an owner of land bordering a natural lake or stream to take and use water on his riparian land. Riparian land must be in the same watershed as the water source and must never have been served by an intervening parcel without reservation of the riparian right to flows from use of groundwater, or other "foreign" water to the natural stream system.
